ARGYLL CAMPBELL

Argyll Campbell, for twenty-eight years a leader in Monterey Peninsula civic life, died at his home at eight o'clock Wednesday night after several months' illness.

Though his going is a loss to the entire Peninsula, it will be a cause of added grief in Carmel where he has spent the richest years of his life. His love for Carmel was almost fanatical and he was always a leader in the fight to keep the town from radical change, to preserve the simplicities.

Born in San Jose, the son of a prominent attorney, he was himself well embarked on a successful legal career with a record of service in the district attorney's office in San Jose, when he came to Carmel in 1914.

Here he engaged in the practice of criminal law and became identified with the Monterey County district attorney's office. But his great contribution to the Peninsula communities was his sound knowledge of municipal law. For fifteen years he was city attorney for Carmel. At times during that period he was also city attorney for Pacific Grove and Monterey, and he was still serving in that capacity for Monterey when he died.

His courage and honesty in politics are known throughout the state. He was Democratic State Chairman during the campaign that elected Olson governor, a close associate of the late Senator McAdoo, and had much to do with the organization of the Eighth Congressional district.

A veteran of the First World War, he was an active member of the Carmel Post of the American Legion.

He is survived by his wife, Mabel Phelps Campbell and two sons, Gordon and John. Gordon is a lieutenant in the Navy and stationed in Washington, John, a lieutenant in the Navy Air Force, is serving overseas. Both sons had furloughs home in recent months.

Funeral arrangements in charge of Paul's Mortuary, Monterey, are pending the arrival of Lt. Gordon Campbell who is to fly out from Washington and is expected to arrive today.

Bensberg Appointed Rent Inspector

Carl Bensberg, Carmel contractor and builder, has been appointed inspector and investigator for the rent control office for Watsonville-Monterey Peninsula area, Wesley W. Kergan, director-attorney announced yesterday.

His work will involve investigation of complaints by tenants against landlords in rent disputes, and of petitions for adjustment in rent filed by landlords who have made major changes in their premises since the rent freeze date.

From the time he came here from Colfax eight years ago until the war put a stop to building, Bensberg was actively engaged as a contractor, building about twenty homes here, some of them among the most attractive in town. He is a member of the male chorus, of the Carmel Mission choir, and of the Musical Arts Club which recently presented him in concert.

His interest in gardening is evident in the yard surrounding the attractive home he has built for his mother and himself at Santa Lucia and Rio Road.

The Meteor

BY GEORGE STERLING

Out of the midnight of the north it came,
Flung from the sapphire of infinity,
And soundlessly was buried in the sea—
An orb without a portent or a name.
Only a drowsy helmsman saw it flame,
A thread of light upon the western Signs—
Drawn on the darkness where the Bull declines
And Aries trembles at the Hunter's aim.

From deep to deep it passed, with none to know
What ashes burned upon the caverned skies—
What altered dust that in the long ago,
Upon a world now strewn on outer space,
Gazes in the eyes of love with equal eyes
Or, for a breath, on their Medusa's face.

Dr. Topping Finds Unpublished Poems Of George Sterling; Recalls Fight With London in Bohemian Grove

Dr. Frank P. Topping, faced with the necessity of cleaning out his desk because he was moving out of his office in Las Tiendas Building last week tackled the job with admirable courage and came up with a fitting reward: three manuscript poems given him by George Sterling in 1925, one of which the Pine Cone Cymbal is publishing for the first time in the neighboring column. The discovery of the poems reminded Dr. Topping that Jack London gave him a manuscript "after we made up a fight in the Bohemian Grove. I must dig it out; it might be interesting."

Though he has rich recollections and substantial souvenirs of his literary and artistic friends and fellow members of the Bohemian Club in its lush days after the Fire, including a painting given him by Rollo Peters, Dr. Topping's contact with the greatest of them all to appear on the San Francisco scene was brief and casual, his memory of the occasion "pretty vague."

"I was just a school boy and had come to my uncle's office. My uncle was Frank M. Pixley, editor of the Argonaut. He introduced me to a thin, sickly looking man, who wore his hair long so that it touched his coat collar. The coat was velveteen. He had on a Windsor tie as red as the blouse you are wearing. It was Robert Louis Stevenson, and he had come to see my uncle about selling some of his writing to the Argonaut. I would have been able to recognize him if I saw him on the street, but that's about all the notice I took."

His first meeting with George Sterling occurred a good many years later in the bar of the Bohemian Club. It was 1906. Dr. Topping had just returned from two years post graduate study in medicine in Vienna and Berlin. He liked the thin young fellow who looked like Dante and helped the illusion by wearing his hair cut in bangs. "Some of the boys didn't like him, but I think it was because they didn't understand him. He was sensitive. And changeable. Up in the air with enthusiasm and good spirits one day, down in the depths the next. We used to have great games of dominoes. He lived at the Club and when he was sick I took care of him."

It was Dr. Topping's reluctance to take fees from a fellow Bohemian Club member that inspired the gift of the poems in 1925 shortly after Sterling had returned from a trip East. Dr. Topping's painting by Rollo Peters was given to him by the artist on a similar occasion.

But the Jack London manuscript was a peace offering. "During one of the Bohemian Club encampments, Jack wanted to open the bar at two o'clock in the morning and rouse the whole camp to drink with him. I wouldn't let him. He was pretty mad. But he got over it. He was a big man, built like the prize-fighter, sailor, he was. But he had a wondreful smile."

Sterling, London, Peters, and other San Francisco literati, after the fire, "discovered" Carmel and either divided their time between the village and the city, or settled permanently in writing shacks and

Old Clothes Drive Not Prospering

The old clothes drive has gotten off in Carmel at a snail's pace and mostly in the wrong direction, service station operators whose places of business are the official depots for depositing the old clothes reported early this week.

The operators are especially distressed that the local population seems to have confused the purpose of the drives to provide usable garments for wear by people in the countries occupied by the allied governments, with a costume party.

"Rubber boots, straw hats with daisies on them, and corsets with whale-bone stays are not what is wanted, but they have been brought in just the same," one operator complained.

"The idea is to bring in clothes you or your family can't wear any more yourself because they have been out grown or are a little out of style, but not stuff that nobody could wear."

Harold Meadows On Torpedoed Ship With Ross

Cadet-Mate Frank Ross arrived home this week end with the information that another Carmel man, Harold Meadows, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Meadows, was his shipmate on the merchant vessel that was torpedoed in the Red Sea recently by a German submarine. The War Department dispatch to the Pine Cone Cymbal last week describing the incident failed to mention Meadows, probably because he was not among the original crew when they cleared home port, but joined the ship later.

He was on the same life raft with Ross and other crew members, was picked up with them by an English trawler, and taken to an African port, but as he is a naval gunner, was needed to fill out a gun crew for another merchant vessel, he was assigned to duty immediately, while Ross was shipped home with the rest of the merchant marine personnel of the torpedoed vessel and is now enjoying leave with his parents, Judge and Mrs. George P. Ross.

It was chance that put the two Carmel men on the same vessel, Ross told the Pine Cone Cymbal yesterday. Ross had finished his preliminary training at Merchant Marine School at Treasure Island, had been assigned to his ship, had made three trips to the Aleutians, another to Honolulu, and had proceeded on this last voyage as far as Cape Town, South Africa, before he met up with Meadows. The latter had been serving in a gun crew on another merchant vessel when he became ill and had been left at a Cape Town hospital. He was fit for service again when Ross' ship made port and as a man was needed to fill out the gun crew, Meadows was assigned to the ship.

It was a pleasant reunion, but the two Carmel men were not long to be shipmates on that vessel. For a week before they entered the Red Sea, they had been receiving submarine warnings. Three days before disaster struck their ship, they got news of the sinking of another merchant vessel three hundred miles to their stern.

The last night they were to sleep aboard their ship was black and moonless. Ross had gone to bed on a cot in the wheelhouse where the skipper was also sleeping as it was one of the cooler spots above deck. Meadows had stretched out on No. 5 hatch, his clothes handy beside him. The torpedo hit at 3:30 in the morning. As the explosion broke every light bulb on the ship and burst open the steam pipes in the engine room, the dazed men groped in steam-filled darkness, their only light a few battery lanterns. They could hear the water rushing into the hold, and feel the ship settling.

The skipper, seeing the extent of the damage, gave orders to abandon ship. Ross got the sextant, chronometer and stop watch and then went to his boat station to find that all the life boats with one exception had been blown to pieces with the explosion of the torpedo. The mate yelled to him to take to a life raft. Ross found one at the stern, and jumped. "It wasn't much of a jump because

Dawson Retained On Faculty At Instructor School

Mrs. D. L. Dawson, received a letter this week from headquarters of the Gunnery Instructors' School, Buckingham Army Air Field, Fort Myers, Florida, stating that her son, Donald, had been selected to remain at the Central Instructors' School as a member of the faculty.

Dawson, who attended Sunset and Monterey high school, enlisted in the Air Corps in May, 1942 and was sent in March of this year to Santa Ana, then to Denver, Colorado. He was graduated from Aerial Gunnery School at Las Vegas on the first of October among the first ten in a class of 600. As a result, he was sent to Buckingham Army Air Field for the instructors' course there. The letter which follows gives the result of the past six weeks' training:

Young Ladies With Urge to Travel Worry Carmel Cops

The exploring and globe trotting urge expressed itself at an early age in two Carmel children this week when a three-year-old and a two and a half-year-old, gave their parents and the police department some suspenseful moments by going off to see the world without acquainting their elders of their intention.

Monday morning Joyce, three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. Ricketson, absented herself from her home on Twelfth between Lincoln and Monte Verde. Her mother and the police searched for three hours for a little girl with "blond hair, blue eyes, wearing green and white slacks and a blue coat," before they found her on the play field at Sunset where she had stopped to visit with some friends.

Chris, two and a half-year-old, growing bored while her mother,

A. A. U. W. Discusses Basis for Peace In Panel Session

Discussion of "Basis for Peace" in the world occupied the American Association of University Women at the meeting Saturday at Holman's Solarium in Pacifc Grove. Following a box luncheon and short business meeting, Miss Marie Von Kanel, chairman for the program, led a panel in consideration of problems confronting the world today in preparation for the close of the war.

Nine additional members formed the panel and gave the ideas of prominent writers as expressed in recent books. Among the writers were Walter Lipmann, Hallet Abend, Motherwell, Bailey, Nevins and Straight. As this year's subject of study for the A. A. U. W. is "Preparation for Peace," there was a lively interest in the discussion, and eagerness to learn the views of leading publicists. It was decided to continue the subject at another panel discussion at a meeting next spring.

At the business session the society voted a contribution of $10.00 to the Community War Chest. Mrs. Blanchard Steeves, legislative chairman gave an outline of the laws affecting women and the family, recently passed by the state and the national governments. The next meeting will be a Christmas party on December 18 at the home of Miss Gertrude Rendtorff in Carmel. Owing to the inclement weather the attendance was not so large as usual.

Carmel to Have Forum Series

Forum plans, which have been indeterminate throughout the fall, have reached a point where it can be announced definitely that a series of lectures under the auspices of the Carmel Adult School will be held starting shortly after the New Year, Frank McClain, Adult School principal said this week.

Though the schedule of lectures has not been entirely worked out yet, McClain said that emphasis would be placed on present day and post war problems, and experts in these fields would be invited as guest speakers.

Hit-Run Juvenile Pays Fine, Loses Driver's License

A sixteen year old boy who hit a parked car with his jallopy, smashed it up and then was "afraid to tell" appeared before Judge George P. Ross Monday to plead guilty to hit run charges.

He was fined $50, given a thirty day sentence suspended for two years and had to surrender his driver's license. His name is withheld as is the practice of the court in juveniile cases.

Painstaking investigation on the part of Carmel police officers led to the young man's arrest Friday following the report of Mrs. William Horn of Camino Real and Ocean that she had found her car badly damaged in the morning after leaving it parked in front of a friend's house on Camino Del Monte between Mission and San Carlos Thursday night. Grill, headlights and radiator were mashed. The hit-run car had also sustained damage as two hub caps were in the vicinity and it had left paint marks on the Horn car.

A checkup on local garages led directly to the hit-run car and the arrest of the boy.

Mrs. Alta Crow Gives Talk to Garden Section

By FLORA HARTWELL

Mrs. Alta Crow, floriculturist of Monterey, spoke for the Garden Section of the Carmel Woman's Club last Friday.

Miss Army Campbell's home was an especially fitting place for this meeting. From her spacious living room one looks out on a charming Oriental garden with its pool, littl e bridges and exotic water plants.

Mrs. Crow's enthusiasm for pools was so contagious that every one soon felt her garden was not complete without the tranquil spot which the speaker believes can be produced only by a pool. Even the smallest garden can have its tiny pool of placid water for which miniature water lilies can now be procured.

Having thus enlisted the interest of her audience in having pools, Mrs. Crow gave detailed instruction about making and caring for them. She offered her help if at any time problems should arise.

The speaker showed many beautiful pictures of water lilies which she had painted. They were of every color. Her face glowed as she told of their beauty—especially that of a red one with color so vibrant it reminds her of a brilliant ruby. She also gave a list of water plants for edging the pool.

Mrs. Crow is a fascinating speaker. Added to her broad grasp of her subject, is a radiance which comes from her particularly tender love for all growing things.

She said in closing: "I do all my own gardening and am often so tired by evening that I wonder if it is really worth while. But after a night's rest, I look out and see my flowers smiling at me and I could not live without their spiritual uplift."

It is interesting to learn that Mrs. Crow's "family tree" is rooted deep in Carmel soil. Her grandmother's grandfather came from Spain with Father Serra and was with him when our Carmel Mission was founded.

Dr. Martin Hall To Speak Here Monday Night

Carmel supporters of the Mills College Institute of International Relations have arranged for Dr. Martin Hall, one of the most popular speakers at the last session of the Institute at Mills, to speak here Monday night at All Saints' parish house at 7:45.

Dr. Hall was a free lance journalist in Europe from 1925 to 1937 and during the interval between 1933 and 36 he covered the underground movement in Germany for the Manchester Guardian.

His subject for Monday night's talk, which is open to the public, will be, Europe's Revolution and the United States.

Alec Miller Guest Speaker for Lions

Alec Miller, sculptor who has recently opened his studio in Carmel, entertained the Lion's Club at their dinner meeting Tuesday night at the Pine Inn discussing his hobby, Scotch and English ballads, reciting typical examples.

He was the guest of Eben Whittlesey. Other guests were: Howard Blewett and Harold Nielsen. Sam Coleman was taken in as a new member. Gene Ricketts furnished the meat for the venison feed.

The club plans to entertain the ladies with dinner on December 14 at the Pine Inn.

Carmel's First Well Baby Clinic Set Next Month

Under the auspices of the Monterey County Health Board and the Carmel P.T.A. Carmel will hold its first child health conference at the Church of the Wayfarer on Lincoln between Ocean and Seventh streets, Thursday, December 2nd, from 9 a.m. to 12 M.

Dr. St. Claire Lindsley will be the examining physician for the Monterey County Health Board. She will be assisted by County Health Nurses and Red Cross Nurses Aides.

Appointments may be made for this conference at the Carmel Post Office by mothers of children under school age, on Monday, Nov. 29th, from 10 a.m. to 12 m., and from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m.

It is a known fact that medical supervision of babies and preschool children results in less illness and fewer deaths. Out of this realization grew Child Health Conferences. Today there are seven of these conferences on the Monterey Peninsula conducted by the Monterey County Health Department in cooperation with local physicians and sponsoring agencies such as the P.T.A. and Civic Women's Club. Responsibility for the development of the conferences, assistance in conducting them, and visits with parents at home or in the conference, rests with the Public Health Nurse of the County Health Department.

Child Health Conferences are essentially educational and preventive, and should not be confused with clinics where treatment is given. Children in need of medical or surgical care are referred to local physicians or clinics. Children with apparent infections or acute illnesses, such as colds, fever or sores, are not admitted. Each mother learns that this precaution is for the protection of her own child as well as of other children.

When a child visits the conference for the first time, the Public Health Nurse discusses with the parent, his past and present health history. He is weighed and measured by volunteer helpers, and is then given a complete physical examination by the doctors. At this time the parent has the opportunity to question the doctor concerning any problems the child presents.

Each year increased interest in these conferences is shown. Mothers who realize the value of the service return regularly as advised, there are larger numbers registered, and improved health among the children is evidence that recommendations have been followed.

Ah! Carmel

From the Pine Cone files January 13, 1938.

"Help! Help! Help!"

It was early morning, just as day dawned, and the cries rang out from the beach. The Schoeninger family, living close at hand on the Point, were awakened from head to foot, meaning from Big Joe to Little Joe. They leaped from their beds in alarm.

"Help! Help! Help!"

Again came the cry. Without waiting to garb himself, Joseph Schoeninger Senior started out through the door.

"Put on your trousers," commanded his wife.

"Put your pants on, Dad," cried Junior.

A moment only he hesitated for again came the call:

"Help! Help! Help!"

No pausing now for life's comforts. Pantless, Schoeninger made for the beach.

In the grey light of early morning a fishing boat lay out in the kelp. Too far away to answer the hail sent by Schoeninger. Certainly, then, too far to have sent so clearly and loudly, those cries for assistance. Yet the men working with lines and nets out there were the only human beings in sight.

The wind was chill. Schoeninger ran up and down the beach, looking anxiously for someone or something that might explain the alarm. Also the run helped warm his bare limbs. Then from behind him it came again.

"Halp—halp—halp!"

He spun around, stared for a moment at a black rock that reached into the sea, upon which the surf broke in white foam. Silhouetted against the spume were the small, sleek heads of a group of sea lions. From their whiskered mouths came the appealing call:

"Al-lup—al-lup—al-lup."

Joseph Schoeninger galloped home and to a place in front of the fire, there he shiveringly resolved to make all future rescues in pants.

Mrs. P. W. Schmiatchen of Monte Verde and Fifth was shopping at Kip's during the noon hour on Saturday, started off for a solitary walk in the rain. She was seen strolling along dampish but contented at the corner of Torres and Eighth by Mrs. J. R. Thode who persuaded her to step inside and rest a bit before continuing with her travels. The police, notified by Mrs. Thode, that Chris was stopping with her for the present, passed the word on to Mrs. Schmiatchen.

Another Carmel Man On Torpedoed Ship

the ship had settled so much."

There on the raft Ross saw Meadows for the first time since he'd gone to bed the night before. "He had nothing on but swimming trunks and was covered with fuel oil—black as a negro. When the torpedo struck, he'd been blown off the hatch and into a mess of oil under the winch." There were about twenty other men aboard Ross' raft, about the same number on the other three rafts.

The captain, after making sure none of his men remained on board—"We could hear him going through the quarters, calling"—cast off with twelve men in the life boat. As the raft Ross and Meadows were on passed around the stern of the vessel, the quarter moon was rising and they saw the silhouette of the submarine, waiting. The sub passed by the little group of shipwrecked men, approached the stricken ship and discharged a torpedo into her. Ross and Meadows saw her explode and sink.

At ten o'clock in the morning, the Captain left the mate in charge of the flotilla of rafts, now tied together, and headed the life boat, which had a motor, for land to get help for his men. The heat became bad, and the men rigged up an awning with oars and blankets. As they did not know how long they would have to drift on the open sea, their water was rationed to two ounces a-piece at noon, and two ounces again at nightfall. They were given a biscuit a-piece the first night.

At two o'clock the following morning, they heard again the engine of the submarine, prowling for any vessel that might come to their rescue. At four in the morning they heard a plane and signalled it with flares. It landed and picked up twenty of the men, and they learned that the skipper had reached shore and had sent help. At five o'clock that evening a British trawler arrived and picked up the rest of the men.

"Only one man of the crew was injured, and he's getting along all right now," Ross said. "Two of the engine room crew were killed when the torpedo hit. One was a cripple, one leg shorter than the other, and we all liked him a lot."

Ross has only a short time to visit with his parents as he leaves next Wednesday for merchant marine school at San Mateo for two months study and his third mate's license.

OPA Files Charges Against Floyd Smith

The Office of Price Administration Tuesday filed an injunction suit in the United States District Court against Floyd Smith, doing business as Kip's Market, Ocean and San Carlos, alleging violation of regulations.

Smith was accused of having displayed meat for sale without properly posting the meat with the price, number of points and grade of meat. He also was charged with failure to post the grade and price on poultry. The violations were said by the OPA to have occurred on or about September 18, 1943.

Brownies and Girl Scouts Active in Junior Red Cross

The Monterey Peninsula Girl Scout Leaders association held a meeting at the Monterey Scout House on Wednesday, November 17, at which Mrs. J. McNally of Carmel, the association secretary, was welcomed back after an absence of several weeks. Pumpkin pie and coffee were served to augment the box luncheons and following a business meeting, the members studied the making of stocking dolls, spool toys and felt needle cases and purses.

On Tuesday, Nov. 23, a council meeting was held in Monterey, with representatives attending from each of the six Peninsula districts, the main event of the gathering a report on the recent activities of the local Girl Scouts. Enough gifts have been assembled through their efforts to fill 56 boxes for the Junior Red Cross—each box containing an average of ten gifts, destined for the children in war-torn countries. Each box contains such articles as wash cloths, soap, comb, toothbrush, top, marbles, puzzle, ribbons, crayolas, pencils and a small doll.

The Brownies made for Hallowe'en for the County Hospital children's ward 25 nut cups and 30 place cards and for Thanksgiving the Brownies and Girl Scouts made 25 napkin rings. The combined contribution to the Community War Chest was $30.

Letters have been sent to 39 Peninsula organizations offering the services of the Girl Scouts in the care of children, waiting on tables, as messengers and in other ways that can contribute to the efficient functioning of community organizations at the present time. Mrs. E. F. Morehouse of Carmel, telephone 868, is serving as head of this Service Bureau.

A new training course for Intermediate Girl Scout leaders began on Tuesday, November 23, at the Monterey Scout House, and will continue for five more sessions, meeting between 1 and 3 p.m., under the guidance of Miss Marie Von Kanel, executive secretary of the Peninsula. New leaders from Carmel are Mrs. Florence M. Doherty and Mrs. Mary Ann Trueblood. A maximum of four hours per week is given by the leaders to their Girl Scout service, and among the subjects taught in the Tuesday classes are folk dancing, songs and crafts.

studios in the Eighty Acres, and diverted themselves with abalone feeds on the beach. Dr. Topping didn't follow the parade to make his permanent home here until he came to join his family in 1926, but he visited here, the first time in 1907 when Ocean Avenue was a sand road. He and his party stopped at the Pine Inn and were put up in one of the cottages.

"Service was excellent. Everything was lovely but they didn't give us enough to eat. So we'd go to the only grocery store in town—Schweninger's, to buy sardines, crackers and cheese and beer and bring them back to the cottage.

"And nobody told us how dangerous the beach was supposed to be. We'd go down in the morning and get way beyond the breakers where the rip tide is supposed to be and we'd have a wonderful swim."

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

Oh, Brother! 20-2!

Was it a boxing match or a basketball game? The gals are still wondering about that so-called basketball fray played on Tuesday during the noon hour between the Mohawks and the feminine challengers.

The girls, "Wildcat" Thorn, "Cyclone" McElroy, "Eel" Reel, "Comic" Botts and the rest of the squad, put up a swell fight.

They drew the first blood with a foul shot by Babs Bolin. Greenan came back for the mighty Mohawks a few minutes later to make their initial score. The "Rough and Ready for Anything" gals stuck close after the ball whether it be in the air or on the floor. "Cyclone" McElroy really was in there pitching, and the tricky shots made by the boxing gloved boys were something. Most of the tricky shots made by the Mohawks were made only because Wyrd willed it.

As a last straw two of the hairless men put Passailaigue on their shoulders and someone passed him the ball. He made the basket, but it took three tries, while fans hooted!

Barbara Bolin and Ann McElroy shared the honors for the girls, each making a tally.

Jim Greenan, Baird Bardarson, and Jack Fremont divided the honors for the Mohawks twelve markers. Russ Bohlke and Dick Uzell did a fine job of refereeing the hairy contest. —Ann Casati

Moving Day

"Mrs. Brey, where does this go?" "Mrs. Brey, do you want this?" "Mrs. Brey——," "Mrs. Brey—" "Mrs. Brey—"

The reason for the above questions? The Journalism class was moving, and everyone and everything was in a dither.

The boys were arguing as to who was going to carry the filing cabinet, the girls were running back and forth between the rooms with hands full of books and papers, and doing more chattering than moving.

To the delight of some underclassmen who happened by, one of the dignified reporters, loaded to the eyebrows with copy paper and pamphlets, tripped and fell, spilling everything to the four winds.

By degrees missing odds and ends are turning up in the queerest places, and by the end of the week everything will be in order.

—June Quinn

After the Ball Was Over

The football players trudged wearily down to Coach Rudd's house at seven o'clock last Sunday evening. Each bore some mark of the fray, a sore arm, an aching back or a lame leg. They were each and all "shot" from the game with Santa Cruz of the day before. They had expected a pleasant but quiet evening at the house of their coach, but boy oh boy! what a surprise awaited them. The three yell leaders, Mary Jane Reel, Ann McElroy, and Nancy Fitzhugh had also been invited, and had planned with Coach Rudd a gay little game called Treasure Hunt. The boys were dragged out of the house and assigned to one of three teams. Each team was headed by one of the yell leaders. Prodded by the leaders, the teams started off with a rush, and the fight was on. People looking out windows at that hour must have thought the younger generation of the town was going mad. Kids were running all over, through yards, over fences and into ditches. About an hour later the boys came stumbling into Coach's yard ready for the prize. Mary Jane's team won, and was rewarded with candy, nuts and cookies. How thankful they were to be able to sit down again!

After resting, they played another game called Song Titles at which everyone had fun. The entire group participated in this, including Mr. Marrs, Mr. Williams, Coach, and his son Chuck.

When the game was over Mrs. Rudd and the yell leaders shooed all the boys out of the house and, to the surprise of everyone, brought out potato salad, sandwiches and soda pop. The boys, (as usual), were delighted when they saw the food, and the rest of the evening was spent in eating.

The football players and the yell leaders heartily thank Mr. and Mrs. Rudd for a delightful party. —Mary Jane Reel

Exhibit

Miss Burtis, head of the Art class, has arranged a wonderful Thanksgiving display in room 9. It consists of a large bowl of fruit, gourds, cranberries, and so forth, to denote the bowl of plenty. With a background of shining gold drapes, it has an artistic touch that adds the splendor of simplicity to an outstanding display.

—Betty Lou Fonteneau.

Art

The art class led by Mrs. Burtis, have been working very hard this year on various projects. At present, they are getting ideas for Christmas cards, and a few of the speedier students have already started block prints, stencils and watercolors for that purpose. Now that the art classes have moved from room 1, which was not very well suited for art, down to bigger and better room 9, the students can find room for all kinds of work. The balcony outside is an excellent place for both sketching and gossiping.

Carmel vs. Santa Cruz

Mud, yea! that's how it started and that's how it ended.

The game was last Saturday, and the boys on the team still show signs of their immortal fight. There are still (regardless of hard scrubbing) traces of mud here and there.

Considering weather conditions there was a very good turnout for both schools. In spite of the rain and mud very few fumbles existed.

The game opened up at 2:00 sharp with a steady rain for about five minutes after the starting gun.

Carmel was on the receiving end, and from here it was a good clean (pardon) muddy fight.

Carmel tried hard for yardage and when she found out that line plays weren't clicking, she started the aerial attack, by which most of her yardage was made.

Santa Cruz had a hard-hitting, fast moving team, and most of their yardage was made on pass plays. By the end of the first half the score was Carmel 0 and Santa Cruz 20. Santa Cruz made three touchdowns, two conversions and one touchback.

The second half opened up with Carmel receiving again. It was in this half that the Padres threatened the Santa Cruz Cardinals. It occurred when Bob Weer, right half, intercepted a pass from the Cardinals and started on his lope to "pay dirt." A Cardinal man put on just a little more speed than Bob could muster and tackled him on the their 30 yard line.

After that it was a hard fight with Carmel trailing with a score of 41 to 0.

Greek History

For the past few weeks Mr. McClain's 7th period World History class has been studying the subject of Greek history.

During class they have drawn maps, erected a replica of the Parthanon, made pictures of the great athletes, and interesting books on the Greek philosophers.

The pupils have greatly enjoyed their work, and have a very definite concept of Greek history.

This exhibit has made a very beautiful and colorful decoration on the walls of room 3 at Carmel high school. —Lillis Harris

MY HERO, THE INVENTOR

By Malcolm D. Whitman, Jr.

We have, each of us, our heroes, wish-people we feel we might either like to meet or be. And in the funny papers we may find their images. Many have feelings about their hero, the cowboy, and so we have Red Ryder. Someone feels the knight errant, always a popular hero, is growing hazy of outline, and so Prince Valiant is drawn with great precision and details. The spinach eater and the sailor are merged strangely in Popeye. The aviator, the dream-world wonder man, the little girl orphan, the timid man, the member of the growing family, almost any hero we may hold, we may find in the comic strip. On occasion appears my hero, the inventor. But none seems to understand him very well or feel comfortable in his presence, for he is usually portrayed as someone of fiendish technical menace and intention, or else as a person who unwittingly produces outrageous and unintended results.

Yet the inventor is still my hero. When I was little, I was shown a few people with the suggestion that these might well be grist for my little hero-mill. Memorable was a Southern Pacific Locomotive Engineer, shown me at a crossing in Burlingame. Fine, full, heavy-set man, teamed up with a fireman, and impressive in puff and power. Not a bad hero he, either, for from the relative security of his high cab he can wave indiscriminately at people, not choosing the good from the bad save perhaps by adding an extra toot of his whistle. Better off, by golly, than the cowboy, who has to choose the wicked from the virtuous, and that in the wink of an eye, to know whom to shoot with his six gun. But the way my litle mind came to figure it, behind all the people I was offered as hero-grist, stood my hero, the inventor.

Who devised the ship for the sailor, the beam gun for Buck Rogers, the complex sound track which gives off the yell felt suitable for Tarzan, or the technique whereby we have Mickey Mouse? The inventor! And as my wishes colored him, so I saw him and see him tinted still, as a person of extreme responsibility. What kind of people knowingly took the plunges into the unknown which have since made it possible for us to go to war with people three thousand miles and more away? My hero.

His mind constructs for him out of possibilities he becomes aware of, a magnificent new order of things, all lumped under "Made feasible by my invention," and he thereafter has the courage not just to sit contemplating his dream, but to butt into the affairs of men trying to make it real. Images from his dream swing him ever a little bit off center relative to his fellow man, so that he is always edging toward his machine, in the process of so doing he may find much to complain of. He doesn't as yet come up against "inventor's union, local so and so," but more remotely he meets with "patent pools" calculated to scare him off if he won't conform to the demands of others who have worked in his chosen field, and the rest of the time he is up against people who treat his machine ideas with scorn, yet give expression to their own thought, just as I am doing in writing this, via typewriter, linotype and printing press, inventions all. And who knows what tomorrow will bring? For were this an account of an airplane crash today, you could "read" part of it from a steel wire, part of it from the indications from a performance recorder, part of it from photographs of airplane parts, taken in a maintenance shop, part of it from testimony of people whose observations had been checked with a lie detector. A versatile geezil has been my hero.

When you close in on him for observation, like other heroes, he dwindles rather. With his effort of mind usually way out there in left field, often for long periods without a glove, he doesn't look like much in the ball game. He can make an amazing and amusing parent, as described in the book, "A Genius in the Family," but not an ideal parent. He can be a creature never understood at all, like the inventors beautifully described in the book, "No Royal Road." My hero, concerned with matters other than those going on around him, becomes often known as a "drip," and to him people are often unkind, whether his invetion win from them wide acceptance or no. The inventor of Nylon, for instance, if my readings tell aright, is already suicide, and his story, if staged by Orson Welles for the camera, might remarkably resemble that in the movie "Citizen Kane." Incidentally, the movie, "Citizen Kane" was photographed with a camera lens which vibrated back and forth, toward and away from the film. My hero in action again behind the scene.

So far as I know, my hero is rarely the super scientific would-be tyrant so often shown in the funny papers as an arch villain. He is usually dream swerved toward some conceived practices of peace, and only turns to war when he is needed to produce the things of war. Come the problems such as we have today, the inventor is willing to turn over to us a bulldozer, or a tank, or an amphibious truck, or a thing with wings which goes so fast it takes up a mile and a half turn around.

All in all, he is a pretty decent fellow. He will in the future invent that which is not wasteful, or more explosive, or more tendent toward getting us into crowds and encouraging us to go off like explosives. He has found out that he can do that, and has made us, in some appalment, admit that he can. And now I look to him to turn the corner, to invent that which will make peace more lovely and more absorbing, more harmonious, more shaped and conceived to serve needs we feel—as for a peace filled bowl of dehydrated soup, with a side glass of re-constituted mile, and a super windmill serving us with power and light, yet without at all depleting the total available reserve of fuel. Do you think there is any chance that he will give us these things? I do, but then, of course, the inventor is my hero.

POETRY

THE KINGFISHER

The kildeer bolts in a thin arc,
The war-cry of the kingfisher
Pipes in the pines; with whir and stir
Of mountain lightning, he aims stark
In the rippled, bouldered river.

No fisher quite so true and bold,
Shadow of the upland shadows,
In the iced crystal of melted snows
He snares his catch of gleaming gold,
Netting in the fast tumbling flows.

For it has been his lot to be
Nested near a watered canyon,
Thunder-reared, housed by rain and sun,
A freeman, kin of rock and tree,
King of fishers where waters run.

—Alex R. Schmidt

FROM ALL TOWNS

I must go away from the town
With its sly, grey people
Who would stalk a dream as a tiger stalks
And feed on a rancid lie;
I must go away from the town
With its fair, false steeple
Where the bells toll out the death of love
And dead men come to die.

I must go away from these eyes
With their hard, bright staring
And the lips that leer with an acid twist
Or droop in a futive whine;
I must go away from these souls
Who are long past caring—
If ever they cared in their wizened hearts—
For the life that must be mine.

I must go away to those hills
Where the clean wind travels
And the firm rock and the straight tree
Are rest to the weary mind;
I must go away to that stream
Where the bright spray ravels—
And thank my God that no ash falls
From the fury left behind!

—Gilean Douglas

TREE IN NOVEMBER

How beautiful here in the pine country
The lone gold poplar stands!
A candle, a flame in an evergreen world,
Lighted by autumn hands;

Lifted and held like a taper stilled
For some supreme event—
The solemn green forest hedged about
Guarding the sacrament.

REVIEWS

WE KNEW IT ALL THE TIME

The following, clipped from the Publishers' Auxiliary, was written by Capt. John L. Scherer, A.C., Air Medal, D.F.C. who was associate editor of Modern Mechanix magazine for three years and then became aviation editor and pilot for the Gannett Newspapers at Rochester, N. Y. He left that job in 1940 to serve two years with the Royal Canadian Air Force. He was transferred to the United States Air Corps in 1942 and sent to India. He is now in China, where this article was written.

Were you to drop in at mail time at any of the global outposts where United States soldiers are now stationed you would soon notice that after letters and packages from home the most popular item looked for at the A. P. O. (Army Post Office) is the home town weekly newspaper. Of course, the national magazines ARE popular with the boys, but the four, six and eight-page Gazettes, Times, Citizens, etc., of the various home towns, are easily the No. 1 choice on the overseas service men's list of reading matter.

The reason for this is partly apparent when one considers that citizens of our smaller towns are more friendly, more neighborly than their brothers in the big cities. The small town citizen is always interested in the activities of his neighbors, most of whom he knows by name, no matter how trivial their activities may appear to an "outsider."

The service man from the small community has carried his neighborly interest with him and

SUNSET SCHOOL NOTES

Social Studies

Our class has just finished studying about Egypt and it has been very interesting, especially about the pyramids and sphinxes. We read about scientists who found how long ago their cities were built. It was so long ago that it doesn't seem possible that people were alive then.

—Erik Short, grade 6.

Silver Rain

Silver rain is falling
And angels are calling.
Oh pretty things—
Oh little drops of rain,
Never be ashamed.

Eva Lou Lippi, grade 5.

Four Classes of Society

There were four classes of society in Egypt. The first was the rulers. They taxed the people under them heavily. They were the richest of all and had the most slaves. Next came the priests and soldiers. They didn't have to pay taxes and were given land by the government. Sometimes the Pharoahs had as many as half a milion soldiers. Next came the free men. They were the farmers and they made up a large part of the population. Last of all came the slaves. They worked for the Pharoahs building temples and pyramids. They were the lowest of all.

—Barbara Quill, grade 6.

The Butterfly Trees

I went to see the butterfly trees in Pacific Grove, Saturday. I saw many butterflies. They looked like dead leaves on the trees. The butterflies are called monarchs. They come to Pacific Grove every year.

—Ruth Pullman, grade 4.

Rain

Today it started to rain
Down upon the window pane,
Then all of a sudden it stopped
To see if there was a rainbow,
But there was only the sun's bright glow.
I ran to the window

—La Rene McEntire, grade 5.

Egyptian Life

Most of the Egyptians were farmers. They farmed along the Nile river. Some years the Nile was good to them because the right amount of water flowed over the banks and into their fields. But sometimes too much water flowed into the fields and everything was flooded. Sometimes not enough water came down from the mountains. The Egyptians produced much grain. They traded the grain for the things they needed in their homes.

—Stephen Whitaker, grade 6.

Pearl Harbor

One Sunday morning in December I was up fixing breakfast when suddenly I heard planes overhead. I ran to see what was happening overhead, planes were diving and swooping down on one another. I hurried in to wake the family. We were told to go down to the beach in our car. The road down was filled with troops and trucks filled with soldiers going down to fix guns on the beach. We stayed there until late afternoon. Then we came back. We had gas masks, trenches and blackout for four months. Then we came back to America. Dad came back a year later.

—Colleen Doherty, grade 6.

A Flat Tire

On our way to Texas we had a flat tire near an Indian service station. My father asked the man if he had a jack. The man said, "No gottem jack, no gottem jack." He said the truck would be back in a little while and there was a jack on it. He told my father to go ask the Squaw if she had a jack. She sat and grinned for quite awhile and then said, "No gottem jack!" After about two hours, the truck came back. My father had to fix the tire all alone. It was a very hot day and we were glad to get started again.

—Sylvia Heinselman, grade 3.

Our Diaries

Our class made diaries. They are a lot of fun to make. We used colored paper and a notebook. We took our favorite color of paper and made a cover for our note books. Then we drew a picture on the cover and printed "My Diary" and name. They are pretty.

—Penelope Zeiss, grade 5.

Winter's Here

Brr! It's cold! Brr! It's cold!
I pull the covers as tight as they'll hold.
Winter's here! Winter's here,
Yet I know snow will not appear.
Pine trees hold their leaves so tight
That Jack Frost cannot get a bite!

—Jackie Wheeler, grade 5.

We Knew It All the Time

it is logical, therefore, that he looks forward to copies of his home town weekly with an eagerness second only to that with which he looks for letters from "Ma," "Pa," and the "girl friend."

Corp. Jones of Smalltown, who is on active service in Iceland, Africa, India or China, feels as though he has received another letter from home when he reads about the latest doings of the city council in a copy of the Smalltown Times. His community pride is exalted when he reads how the local scrap metal drive went over in a big way and how a unit of the Red Cross Auxiliary meets weekly for lessons in first aid, etc. He is equally proud of the cooperation shown by home town merchants who sponsored a full-page advertisement to help put over the war bond campaign.

He is pardonably pleased when he reads the write-up given him by the publisher of the Times in announcing his acquisition of corporal's striped. Within the bounds of censorship, the editor has told about his training, etc. And you can bet he shows it to the fellows who share his tent or barracks. Corp. Jones may be only another serial number to the army, but he is "one of our boys" to the home town folks—and the local weekly lets him know it.

Through the pages of his home town weekly the war has changed many things in Smalltown, life goes right along with its births, graduations, marriages, lawsuits, etc. Items too insignificant to rate more than one or two lines in the metropolitan press are quarter and half-column news in the weekly press and Corp. Jones reads them with greater interest than he does the reports of world doings in the news magazines.

Corp. Jones and his buddies rarely have to subscribe to their home town newspapers. Either the folks or some organization like the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Mothers Club, etc., have entered subscriptions for them. However, even if Corp. Jones had to shell out the subscription fee from his own pocket, it is almost a sure bet his name would appear on the mailing list, for if there is one thing he does not want to miss, it is the home town weekly—connecting link with the world he knew.

L. S. Committee of I. U. S. M. Convene In Off Shore Surf

As though to celebrate the first of the regular big winter surfs which began rolling in last Friday on Carmel beach, a large shoal of sea-lions showed up at the foot of Santa Lucia Ave., and sustained themselves there for the better part of two days, riding inshore on the largest combers.

It was at times very impressive to onlookers to see the great waves surge up under the hundreds of closely grouped bodies, most of them lying flippers up in a formation which, when the foam of each wave subsided, would prove to be still in the same place. Sportive sea-lions at the outsea end of the group would leap as the hump of each wave came upon them, while from the inshore end, smaller ones would peel off and caracole down through the waves often in a pattern resembling a question mark. Such antics literally pose a question—the answer to which probably is that the affair was one of the regular meetings of the Longshore Seafood Committee of the Inter-Oceanic Union of Submersible Mammals—for which the local arrangements had equally probably been made under the direction of a large bull sealion, reported as having sat for several afternoons in the preceding weeks on one of the rocks overlooking the site of the convention. This preceding sea-lion gave every appearance of being a really distinguished visitor to Carmel waters, and was probably in a position to have given us a really interesting statement on current conditions. However, it is understood that sea-lions permit printing of their opinions only in salt water, except for the special Braille editions published in arrangements of pebbles and bound with sea-weed, and that the minutes of the Santa Lucia avenue meeting are already out of print.

CONSERVE AND SAVE FOR VICTORY!

PAMPER Your WATER HEATER!
He's a priceless old dear!

Heavens to Betsy...wouldn't it be awesome if your water heater quit you cold? Here are four ways, however, to pamper the old dear to keep him happily and faithfully yours for a long time.

1. CUT DOWN ON WASTEFUL USE OF HOT WATER. Think before you draw even a quart or two of hot water. Was it necessary? Make it snappy when you take a shower. Rinse dishes in a pan...NOT under a running faucet. Use less hot water for a tub bath.

2. DRAIN YOUR WATER HEATER REGULARLY. To drain, open the valve on your heater and run water into a bucket until clear of sediment. That's all.

3. KEEP YOUR WATER HEATER CLEAN. Brush off the burner occasionly.

4. DO NOT HEAT WATER TOO HOT! If your water heater has an adjustable thermostat, set it to 120 degress. It will be easier on your plumbing, too. Remember call your plumber or repair man only when absolutely necessary. They are busy people these days.

Sunday House Party

An informal house-party was held last Sunday afternoon from three to six at the new home of Mrs. Grace C. Howden on San Mateo Road in Carmel Woods. This home has become a popular center of warm hospitality for her many friends in Carmel and vicinity. Added to the loveliness of the view of ocean and mountains is the spacious comfort of the home and the gracious hospitality of its kindly hostess. There is no social starchiness at these gatherings but a sort of home-coming atmosphere. Seated in a semi-circle around the great fireplace the guests chat in easy and happy friendliness. In the truest sense, Grace C. Howden is "at home" to her guests. On this occasion Mrs. Maud De Yoe presided at the tea table. The other guests were Mr. and Mrs. John E. Abernethy, Dr. James E. Crowther, Miss Margaret Sherman Lea, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Matthews, Mrs. Karl G. Rendtorff, Miss Gertrude Rendtorff, Dr. and Mrs. Edward O. Sisson, and Mrs. F. W. Ten Winkel.

Awards Given at Court of Honor

Friday there was a very excellent Boy Scout Court of Honor. Chairman for the evening was Ernest Morehouse, and Troops 86 and 39 were present.

The meeting started off with a flag ceremony and then a few words by Mr. Morehouse. Mr. Frank Hay, Scoutmaster of Troop 86 made the awards. Second class awards were made to Stephen Brooks and Clive Rayne. First class award went to Treat Arnold. Merit Badges were given to Mike Monahan, Treat Arnold, Eric Leffingwell and Clayton Neill, all of whom were from Troop 86.

Following the giving of awards, Mel Johns, regional councilor conducted contests. Two boys tried to name the 16 points of the compass, and all the boys tried to tie a square knot, but it proved disastrous for a few. Finally, two boys tried their hand at signaling. There was a fine closing ceremony. Several of the boys' parents were present, but many more are expected next time. —Clayton Neill

About ten o'clock the floor show began with a dancing beauty of 1926 (Claire Warner) with Mr. Marrs accompanying her on the piano. Next to entertain was Jo-An Thorn, in a snaky black evening dress, singing St. Louis Blues. The last of the entertainment was produced by Florita Botts and Jimmy Heisinger in their own peculiar version of "Pistol Packin' Mama." The floor show was a great success.

The chaperones for the occasion were Mr. and Mrs. Getsinger, Mr. and Mrs. Moller, Miss Sheldon, Miss McNamara, Mr. Williams, Mr. Marrs, Mr. and Mrs. Morehouse, and Mr. Alfred Rico. The party was over at twelve.

Cafeteria

"Boy but that food is good, I'm getting some more."

That's what everyone has been saying so I decided to find out for myself and see if these comments are true. Well, yesterday I had the chance and so passed with the line past the lunch counter and out into the Caf. On the counter there were loads of good and nourishing foods. The hot dish was a swell looking hamburger with tomatoes and onions and spinach for a vegetable. There were salads of all kinds, sandwiches, cakes and pies, rolls, milk, milk shakes and ice cream.

Well, I glanced around and finally took a fruit salad, hamburger and a bottle of milk. When I got to the cashier she asked 24c! Was I surprised! After that jolt I wondered if it could really taste that good. I tried the hamburger and boy! it was good.

The cafeteria is under the able management of Mrs. Esther Clark and Mrs. Margaret Little. In spite of the war these two women with the help of some of the students are putting out the best meals Carmel high school has ever had.

Drama Class

Once again the drama class of Carmel Hi has decided really to get down to work and present a play that will provide enjoyment for every one. For the first play of the year to be presented a 19th century melodrama has been selected. Its title: "He Ain't Done Right by Nell," and it will be directed by Miss Beeson, director of dramatics. It is a one-act affair with an olio following. The olio is being directed by Jim Jensen who for the last two years has been with the First Theatre of Monterey. The cast includes the following: Mary McElroy, Oliver Bassett, Wynn Hutchings, Mary Gregory, Jim Hole, Joan Carr, and Claire Warner. The play will be presented first, on the 1st of December after school adjourns, and also the 2nd, and 3rd of December. A big turnout is expected from the students, and any parents wishing to attend are "welcome."

Special Holiday Showing of "Bertha" At First Theatre

"Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl" has a special Thanksgiving holiday performance tonight, tomorrow and Sunday nights at the First Theatre, Monterey. This priceless melodrama, followed by its merry, romping olio, played to capacity houses at its opening last week. Many disappointed patrons were turned away on Saturday and Sunday evenings.

Carmen Mercante as "Bertha," the poor working girl whose virtue finally triumphs, scored a big success, as did Jim Jensen in the role of the hero; Allan Sonin as the unscrupulous villain; Phyllis Setzer as the villain's accomplice; Darwin Law as the rescuing friend, and all the other Gold Coast Troupers in their supporting roles.

Wilma Bott won deserving recognition as director of the production, and in her olio number "Ann Boleyn," which brought down the house and brought frenzied demand for a repeat.

"Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," plays tonight, Saturday and Sunday nights at the historic First Theatre in Monterey.

Mrs. Edith Anderson left last last week for Pennsylvania to visit her sister.
